History of Fae Romance

The roots of fae romance can be traced back to the Celtic and Norse myths and legends, which featured stories of relationships between humans and supernatural beings. In the Middle Ages, fae romance became popular in Europe, with stories such as "Tristan and Isolde" and "The Mabinogion."

In the 19th century, fae romance experienced a resurgence in popularity, thanks to authors such as William Blake, Samuel Taylor Coleridge, and John Keats. These authors wrote poems and stories that romanticized the fae world and explored the themes of love, loss, and magic.

In the 20th century, fae romance continued to evolve, with authors such as J.R.R. Tolkien and C.S. Lewis creating complex and well-developed fae worlds. In the 1970s, fae romance became a popular subgenre of paranormal romance, with authors such as Marion Zimmer Bradley and Patricia Briggs writing stories about fae who live in the modern world.
