One of the most distinctive features of Teskey's poetry is his use of the Spenserian stanza. The Spenserian stanza is a nine-line stanza that was developed by the English poet Edmund Spenser in the 16th century. The stanza is composed of eight lines in iambic pentameter followed by a ninth line in iambic hexameter. The rhyme scheme is ABABBCBCC.

Teskey's use of the Spenserian stanza is masterful. He uses the form to create a sense of beauty and order, while also allowing for a great deal of flexibility and expression. In his poem "The Last of the Light," Teskey uses the Spenserian stanza to describe the beauty of the natural world and the passage of time.

The last of the light, and the day is done, And the birds are all flown

The poem is a beautiful and serene meditation on the passage of time. Teskey's use of the Spenserian stanza helps to create a sense of order and beauty, even as the poem explores the themes of loss and change.

In addition to his use of the Spenserian stanza, Teskey's poetry is also notable for its exploration of the themes of love, loss, and time. In his poem "Elegy for My Father," Teskey explores the grief of losing a loved one.

My father is dead, and I am alone, And the world is a dark and lonely pl

The poem is a powerful and moving exploration of the grief of losing a loved one. Teskey's use of the Spenserian stanza helps to create a sense of order and beauty, even as the poem explores the themes of loss and sorrow.

Teskey's poetry is a gift to readers. His work is beautiful, intelligent, and emotionally resonant. He is one of Canada's most important poets, and his work will continue to be read and enjoyed for generations to come.
